The Early Years

Walt Disney was born in Chicago in 1901. He loved to draw from a young age, and he sold his first cartoon at the age of 19. In 1923, he moved to Hollywood and founded the Walt Disney Company. The company's first major success was the animated short film "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," which was released in 1937. The film was a huge hit, and it helped to establish Disney as a major force in the entertainment industry.

Disney continued to produce popular animated films throughout the 1940s and 1950s. In 1955, he opened the first Disneyland theme park in Anaheim, California. The park was an instant success, and it quickly became one of the most popular tourist destinations in the world.

Disney died in 1966, but his company continues to produce new animated films and theme parks. Today, the Walt Disney Company is one of the most powerful media companies in the world.

The Artists Who Knew Walt Disney

We spoke to several artists who worked with Walt Disney on his films. They all had fond memories of him, and they all agreed that he was a brilliant artist and a visionary leader.

Marc Davis, an animator who worked on "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," said, "Walt was a genius. He had an amazing ability to visualize things and to communicate his vision to others. He was also a great leader. He knew how to inspire people and get them to work together towards a common goal."

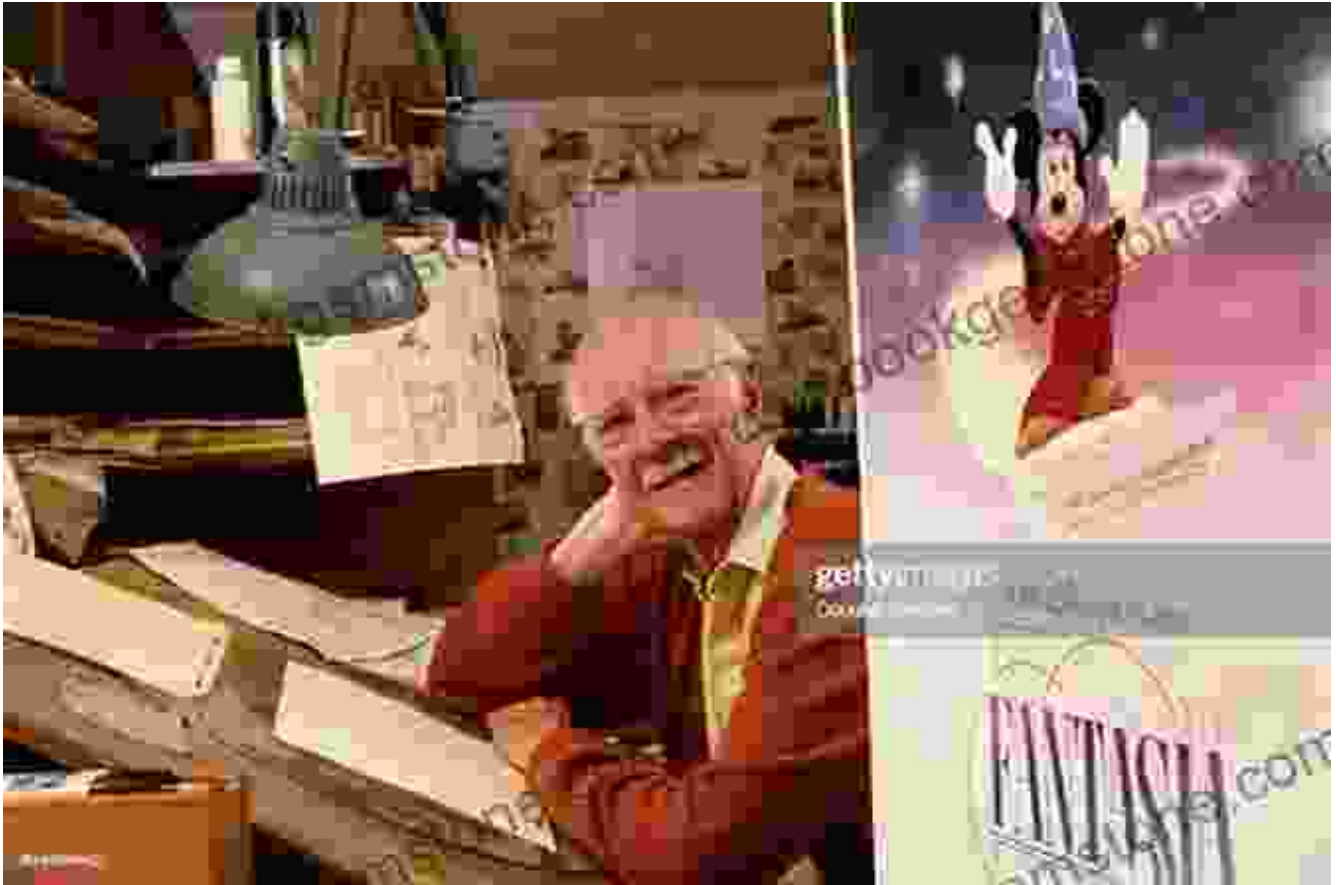

Frank Thomas, another animator who worked on "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," said, "Walt was a very demanding boss, but he was also very fair. He expected a lot from his employees, but he was always willing to help them when they needed it. He was also very generous. He would often give his employees bonuses and gifts."
